THE NEW YORK MUSICAL FESTIVAL. Elaborate Preparations for the Grand Entertainment to Take Place Next May. The Music Festival Association, which has charge of the preparations for the great music festival to take place in New York next May, there will be four evening performances, as follows: First evening, Bach, Mozart, Handel; seem ond evening, Beethoven; third evening, Handel; seem on will be delivered by Rev. R. Scott Norris, arrenal grounds.

The trip on have issued a prospectus, in which it is stated that three afternoon performances, which, it is expected, will enlist the personal co-operation of noted European composers, and which will afford special opportunities for the great soloists of the festival. In addition to the well-known American artists, many celebrated European singers and performers will appear, whose engagements are now pending and whose names will be announced when the contracts are completed. The Seventh Regiment Armory has seating capacity for an audience of nearly ten thousand. At the western end of the main hall will be built the great stage for or-chestra, chorus, and soloists, modeled after the plant of the stage for the Handel festivals at the place of the stage for the Hander restryats at the Crystal Palace, at Sydenham. The chorus will be the feature of the feature of the feature of the feature of the feature, and the computed that it will number afficen hundred, except on the tenters are as follows: Rev. R. Scott Nords, Baltimers, W. B. Marche Washington: Mr. Seyear, sing. The New York Chorus Society and the Brooklyn Philharmonic Chorus will form the bulk of the chorus, but societies from other cities will take part, and among these is the Oratorio Society of Baltimore. It is believed that our own Philharmonic Society might participate in the Handel performance, and thereby give Washington the credit of assisting in what will probably be the greatest musical festival ever known in this country. The entire musical direction will be under the control of the eminent conductor. Theodore

A Complimentary Entertainment. An elegant and enjoyable literary and musical reunion took place at the hospitable residence of Mrs. Jane A. Stewart. No. 922 Eighth street northwest, on Wednesday evening. Mr. Turney W. Wilkins, son of the hostess, acted as master of ceremonies most gracefully. Mrs. M. E. Davidson recited with exceptional power a poem written by Mrs. M. E. Kail, entitled "Crown Our Heroes," Mr. Lafayette Sykes the wellknown vocalist and campaign balladist, saug the "Battle is Begun," which was received with applicate. Mr Hallett Murray, perhaps better known by his real name, Crypti Palmoni, a member of Fred Warde's company read an origi-nal poem by the poet-artist Long, entitled "Alice Greene," which was rapturously applauded, although it was evident Mr Palmoni labored under the disadvantage of reading from manuscript.

Mrs. Emily Thornton Charles recover a superscript. Mrs. Emily Thornton Charles recited a serio-comic poem of her own composition, "A Woman's Reason for Love." Miss Charles, a lovely blonde, then entertained the company with some selections on the plane. The talented writer, Mrs. Kail, recited her poer *Ohio," with much spirit and expression, and was warmly applauded for her effort. Mr E. G. Barnard of the Treasury, entertained the company with several short recitations and laughable ance-dotes. Mrs. Ormes, Mrs. Smith, Miss Mamie Bryant, Miss Burk, Miss Nettle Sanford, Judge Emerson, of Louisiana; Mrs. I. R. Morrell, Mrs. Kennaugh and daughter, Miss Frankie Evans, and many others were present. The above entertainment was given who is about to leave our city for her home in Ohio. as a complimentary reception to Mrs. Mary E. Kail.

JACKSON GROVE CAMP-MEETING Religious Services to Open To-Day-The Tents A Up-Description of Some of Them-Who Are Already on the Ground and

Who Are Expected. Special to THE REPUBLICAN. JACKSON GROVE, July 27 .- The sound of the hammer was heard in Jackson Grove yester-day, and to day the voice of the preacher will pre-vail. Yesterday was the day of preparation, to-day the camp-meeting begins. Religious services have but little else to share the public attention rith at Jackson Grove. The tents-there are no cottages—are ranged in a quadrangle about the place, where the preaching is held, and are no more than fifteen yards away, and so the occumore than fifteen yards away, and so the occupants will have the gospol pouring into their doors and windows all day and night. This might seem to be an objection in more worldly comp-meetings, but here it is regarded as an advantage. In fact, there is nothing else to do except attend meetings and hear seemons. There are no conquet meetings and hear seemons. There are no conquet of the boat, and we agreed to write to the inspectors of the boat, and we agreed to write to the inspectors of the boat, and we agreed to write to the inspectors of the boat, and we agreed to write to the inspectors of the boat, and we agreed to write to the inspectors of the boat, and we agreed to write to the inspectors of the boat, and we agreed to write to the further than the thing of the could not force Mr. that there are but few young people. The board floors of the tents were neatly carpeted, and lounges and easy-chairs were scattered about. In more pretentious front we landed Captain John R. Wood esine on board were scattered about. In more pretentious front parlors, as they are called, there were centralistics with sliver liee-plichers upon them. In front of the door of one tent was suspended a bird cage. Back of this front parlor was a bed-room, with the sleeping banks arranged on both sides. These two rooms exhausted the accommodation of the tent. But in most cases a smaller tent is creted behind, where the cook-stove is such that the dining-table. This is, however, an claborate tent, and generally the cook-stove is seen to stand out barely behind the tent, with its stumpy stovepipe sticking stiffly into the air. the Improvements. Captain Barker, late of the steamer Arwsmith, who has been a steamboat commande or fifteen years, furnishes the following statement about the Arrowsmith: "When the Inspectors came on board of the Arrowsmith about six weeks ago to inspect her I pointed out to Mr. Lowery what work ought to be done to her and what was lacking in her outfit. They put the pressure on her boiler and loft. I received her certificate of inspection, also an excursion permit to carry seven hundred additional passengers. I apoke to Mr. Philips, the superintendent, about the work that ought to be done to make the beat comply with the steamboat law, then if an accident or curred there would be no blame fall on m He promised me time and again to have the work done. The president of the company came on from New York; I spoke to him about it, told him bit in explanation of this it may be well to state | Philips to comply with the law. I got Mr. Lou | Clements, the deputy collector and inspector of the coming, but they are not here yet. The tenters | the port, to write to them, but receiving no engineer. He said he had two old force pumps that hardly supplied the boller with water, the pine plugs would fly out now and then, and the passengers were talking about it. He thought it was best to stop her. We came to the wharf on Friagain until these repairs were made. Soon after we landed Captain John R. Wood came on board to take command of the boat. Upon examining

The inspectors made eath six weeks ago that she had everything called for, knowing that it was not so. I was anxious that Mr. Philips should put on board the boat all that the law required. I could not get him or the president of the company to do it, therefore I refused to run the boat any longer. Now the enersion comes in does a good dinner. Now the enersion comes in does a good dinner. Now the question comes in does a good dinner, with champagne wine thrown in, weaken the eyes of the inspectors. If so, the owners of steamers ought to know it. It was the opinion of old steamboat men that the inspectors must have been blind when they inspected the two ferry boats, and gave them a certificate for one year. With these facts I leave the public to judge whether I was right or not for refusing to run the Arrow-smith in the condition she was in."

While her lover had been a smuggler and pirate, a fugitive from justice, yet he was white; and his own friends, who had concealed his identity when he returned to New Orleans and established a bank under an a sumed name, threatened to betray him unless he would break his engagement with the creole girl. Delphine finally asserts that Olive is not be daughter, and produces portraits of her white parents, which removes all opposition, the wed-ding takes place, and the mother dies at the confessional, where she has gone to be absolved from the lie she has told.

THE COUNT'S SECRET. By EMILE GABORIAU Boston: Estes & Laurent. Washington: William

This novel, the latest of the many works of Emile Gaboriau, is Frenchy in the fullest sense. The plot is dramatic and is full of interest, although in some of the incidents bordering on the improbable. Yet the story is no graphically told that it has a fescination almost irresistible. There are glimpics of the demi world, yet there is hardly a French novelist who fails to give some pictures of the darker side of life. There is no question as to the absorbing interest of the book.
